The Modern Method For Storage Battery Charging

The Roth Constant Potential Motor Generator

The Roth Constant Potential System offers the most modern and efficient method for charging starting and lighting batteries, and does away with the many disadvantages of the older charging methods. Each battery is charged independently of any other. Each battery takes just the proper amount of current that its condition warrants. A real taper charge is given.

It means a better charge and longer life for the battery. The batteries are fully charged in from six to eight hours which means much to the motorist.

Constant Potential charging saves you money on your rental bills. Batteries do not gas violently as they do when being charged by chargers of the series type, and are given a positive taper charge.

Occasionally the statement will be made that batteries cannot be charged in such short time without injury to the plates. Constant Potential chargers are used by large battery factories in their own service stations which really proves that Constant Potential charging is not detrimental.

Bring your battery in to us and let us prove our statements. Don't forget our corn test. Are you going to win a prize. Bring in your fifteen ears today and get in the race.
